Threats from Email

Email "spam" may push inappropriate materials to children

The collage consists of three overlapping screenshots:

- Top Screenshot: A Wired News article titled "Porn Spam: It's Getting Raunchier" by Julia Scheeres, dated 02:00 AM Sep, 30, 2002. The article discusses explicit images in spam emails, such as naked women performing oral sex with guns or large dogs, and mentions that these images are used to drive traffic to niche porn sites.
- Middle Screenshot: A spam email interface showing a message from "Dick" dated Thu Oct 12 21:54:46 2006. The subject is "using our all-natural product". A red "PEPatch" logo is visible, along with a quote: "In a poll conducted by Durex, 67% of women said they were unhappy their lover's penis size." Below the quote, it says "By using our all-natural product you will experience 4 major physiological changes:" followed by a list of four items.
- Bottom Screenshot: A spam email interface showing a message from "Bryan Hardin" dated Mon Oct 9 21:13:30 2006. The subject is "If you do not have another medicine to use for an attar". The email contains an advertisement for ED drugs, listing "VIAGRA $1.56", "CIALIS $3.00", and "LEVITRA $2.78". It also includes the text "CLICK HERE, - NO PRESCRIPTION REQUIRED!"
